

Angular Living

A New Industrial Romanticism

The focus on the stealth technique creates a new aesthetic with angular, faceted, folded, bent and geometrical shapes, visible construction details and a Meccano-like look.

REMOVE Peter Johansen, Felix de Voss and Thomas Bentzen, three colleagues from the Remove design collective in Copenhagen, staged a joint exhibition on the theme Cut, Bend, Weld. Among the pieces on show was Roses, a series of wire stools by Peter Johansen. WHY? I like working with wires, it's like doing three-dimensional drawings.

WHAT DO YOU WANT? Make people happy and curious. THE DREAM ASSIGNMENT? To design an entire concept from start to finish, like a restaurant. THE DREAM PRODUCER? Maintains consistently high quality and manufactures only a small quantity of furniture from several different designers. HOW WAS THE FAIR? We made several useful contacts with the press, including journalists from Frame and Wallpaper. AND NOW? I'd like to start working more with wood again, preferably in combination with metal.
